

Rabih Mroué: ~~I, the Undersigned~~ The People are Demanding

(Title change in response to Middle East events)

Exhibition
23 March – 14 May 2011

Press view
22 March 2011, 10am-12 noon, curator's talk at 11am

Iniva (Institute of International Visual Arts) presents the first solo exhibition in the UK by Lebanese artist, theatre director, playwright and actor Rabih Mroué at Rivington Place. A last minute intervention by the artist directly responds to current political events, the original title I, the Undersigned has been replaced with The People are Demanding and a new work produced. The exhibition explores politics, conflict and the relationship between personal responsibilities and the wider narratives of Lebanon and the region.

The iconic slogan 'The People are Demanding' is being heard in cities across the Middle East where a revolution is unfolding, and becomes the title of a new installation for the window space. Including this slogan with a list of actions, the work is an acknowledgment of the extraordinary revival of popular unity, linking the exhibition to the street and elsewhere.

Other installations in the exhibition pose questions concerning historical narration, memory and forgetting. Mroué's approach merges critical theatre and performance art, incorporating video footage, photographs, found documents and newspaper clippings.

In On Three Posters. Reflections on a video-performance, 2004, Mroué analyses the different film takes rehearsed by one of the first suicide bombers in Lebanon. Grandfather, Father and Son, 2010, brings together material from the library of Mroué's grandfather, a religious scholar turned Communist; a treatise written by his father during 1982, the year of the Israeli occupation of Lebanon, and a story by Rabih Mroué himself in 1989.

Je Veux Voir (I want to see), 2010, an installation made especially for the exhibition, is based on Mroué's experience of co-starring with French actress Catherine Deneuve in a feature film (2008). She went to see the aftermath of the 2007 Israeli attack on the South of Lebanon with Mroué for what was his first visit back to his native village.

The Inivators (Iniva's Youth Advisory Board, aged 18-25), in collaboration with artist Tania El Khoury, are staging live art performances and public interventions with their individual response to Rabih Mroué's work, follow their activities and book places at events online.
